Detection of acute radiation effects in the murine Harderian gland. The Harderian gland is an immunoprivileged organ that produces a number of immune-related proteins. Previous studies have shown that Harderian gland is somewhat resistant to the effects of single-dose irradiation. The present study was initiated to determine whether acute radiation responses in the Harderian gland are detectable and, if so, whether they are modulated by host and/or dose. Determination of the acute effects of gamma-irradiation were based on changes in the levels of several soluble factors and plasma proteins that could be released as a consequence of the damage to the epithelium. The following changes were observed. (1) Irradiation of C57Bl/6 mice with 1000 cGy resulted in a decrease in the levels of the secreted IgA and anti-inflammatory IL-10 and an increase in the levels of the inflammatory factors IL-1 and TNF-alpha.
