Activity Reporter is not an ordinary software. It has a strong spyware oriented functionality that ensures that a user is surfing the Internet in the most convenient way. Activity Reporter has a rather simple and straightforward interface that will help any casual user determine the function of an application. The main window provides a comprehensive list of all processes running on the target computer, along with the Internet Explorer tabs used, the file used, the size of the generated HTTP, FTP and POST requests, and so on. You may try to determine which processes on a PC are performing the most intensive actions, but you'll get to know nothing about the Internet usage of the machine. The monitoring system will also help you identify any unlicensed or crack versions of the application running on the computer. This is the most effective spyware oriented application that will help you track every Internet activity of the user. It could also be called a time tracker application.
