Since it's been out for a while now and so many people are asking me to post this soundtrack on the internet, I just couldn't resist. I've never heard it before but I do hear it in my head when I go into the game. I don't think I've ever heard a video game soundtrack that captures the feel of the video game so well. It fits the mood, the setting, the characterization of the characters. If you've played the game you'll know what I mean. Leisure Suit Larry - Magna Cum Laude Uncut and Uncensored is a Sega Megadrive/Genesis, Action/Adventure game created by Al Lowe, designed by Mike Berlyn and published by Sierra in 1990 and heavily inspired by Humor games like Jagged Alliance. The game lets you play as Larry (or Largo) as he tries to attend university and get through his life. The plot of the game gets somewhat different in each of the endings the player gets. You'll see that the game is filled with random jokes, pop culture references, cartoon parodies, and sex. The game is played through linearity, allowing you to approach and interact with objects in a certain order. The game also has some parts in which you need to perform a certain action to make things work (such as to use the elevator in which you need to press the elevator button, you can't just walk in thinking you can use the elevator). Larry's moveset is split into the following elements: - Attack Larry is able to use his fists and punches to attack people, he can use these attacks to defeat opponents quickly in his fist, he can also use them if his health is low. Punching an object will break it. - Strength Larry has a lot of health, and he can use his fists and punches to beat up enemies, he can also use his strength with some objects, like the doors or the bat. If Larry is hit with a punch, he will lose health. - Jump Larry is able to jump high and short distances. He can use his jump to reach a ledge on a wall, he can also use it to reach a window, and he can use it to make a jump to reach another ledge, etc. - Walk Larry can walk, but he is limited by his movement speed, if it gets too low, he can't walk, and if it gets to high he's able to walk really fast. He can use his walk to climb stairs, he can also use his walk to reach an object and manipulate it. If Larry is hit by the object, he will start to lose health. - Use Items Larry can use many objects around him, the type of objects he can use depends on his health. He can use the items listed below to find new stuff or use items: - Actionball

"Circle Brawl" was a residential neighborhood of Antarctica, and is the most populated neighborhood in Antarctica per capita, with a population of 10,000 humans. It is also, by virtue of containing two out of every three Earth's penguins, home to all of them. It is located in the colony known as Landing Bay. History and geography The circle roughly covers the small peninsula that connects Buckle Island and North Group, both of which form part of the Gertrude Island. Circle Brawl derived its name from the two immense steel constructions of a 180-meter diameter hanging from the Antarctic mountains, known as the "Hanging Giants", which create an artificial archipelago that was drained at the beginning of the 21st century. The tallest mountain in the archipelago, the connection of these two giant structures is at all times the focal point for the entire land, creating an area of supernatural beauty. Because of this natural phenomenon, Circle Brawls residents have to be more vigilant, since the mountains protect them more than the rest of the continent and are objects of envy and hatred for other people in the region, especially for those who live in Landing Bay, where they cannot see the Giants. The circle is also subject to the beauties and influences of the geographic magnificence that permeate the surrounding area. The circle is divided into three sectors known as East (which covers the east side of the island), West (covering the west side) and North (Covering the northern part of the island). Population and economics Circle Brawl has evolved from a high-tech research base to a tourist destination in a few years. It's the most modern neighborhood in Antarctica in terms of architecture, services and economic development. It has been designed as an open-air urban development and thus its topography is of great importance. Before the development of Antarctica, the Company brought in 5000 workers and invested an amount equivalent to $7 million of its time. After a few years of development, it was estimated that 24000 people inhabited the area but the real number of residents was more than 30,000, mostly farmers. The residents of the circle have limited access to the rest of

Antarctica because of landing bay restrictions, and have to travel the South Island the only road that touches the circle. In 2011, Circle Brawl's population exploded, exceeding its capacity and causing the residents to spread into Landing Bay. A few months ago, they began to
