What's new:

and Breaking the Swords In the Yangshao and other parts of southern China, people were busy carving figures out of wood. By 1000 BC, the techniques of wood carving had reached a much higher level in China than anywhere else in the world.Wood carvers of the Yangshao culture like Marquis Kuang Kung carved cool figures out of wood.The Marquis Kuang Kung, who lived 2,000 years ago and was the ancestor of the imperial family of China, must have become a very influential man. This figure is a wooden statue of him serving the Emperor. However, writing, maths and other activities were still in their primitive stages in our ancient period. It is therefore remarkable that he carved this extremely complex figure. The vertical and horizontal lines running through the figure come from the way he used a wood saw to cut his blocks.The vertical lines produced by his thick saw cutting were then transfered onto the wood as double curves, while the horizontal cuts left the imprint of the block's edge lines directly on the wood.This result shows that, despite having grown up in the age of the shift from the Stone Age to the Bronze Age, the Marquis Kuang Kung was still learning to use his skills and was unwilling to accept traditional methods of carving. One thousand years ago, the ancients of old China had produced numerous wood carving techniques. However, marquis Kuang Kung thought that he could do better than all the Chinese wood carvers from two thousand years ago and introduced new carving techniques to the world of cutting.In the past, marquis Kuang Kung's "wood carving" is regarded as a pure skill; today it is regarded as a type of art. To make a carving like this, the first carving is of wood:Secondly, marquis Kuang Kung carved figures of wood:Thirdly, marquis Kuang Kung used his wood carving skills to express his feelings:Finally, marquis Kuang Kung developed his skill so that his work became fully expressive.We call these principles of wood carving "marquis Kuang Kung's Master Arts of Wood Carving",These principles are universal; they are also the key to wood carving skill and education for the present generation.The main point of wood carving is to use skillful techniques to carve correctly carved wood. In order to make the best quality wooden sculpture, you must first undertake the following:The first part is to select good quality blocks, A suitable block is an important part of a piece of sculpture. Although generally, many carvers begin with small
