"As far as we know, India has no such programme as that," said a senior scientist working on an inter-stellar mission. Indian Minister for Space Shri Jitendra Singh had on Tuesday said the country's space programmes will be far ahead of the UAE by 2022, adding that India will be the first country to send a person into space. Singh had also said India has no shortage of resources as it has six lunar craters and the Chandrayaan-2 mission was built with resources left by the failed Chandrayaan-1 mission. Singh said India is now working on a concept of being the first one to send a human to outer space, but it will take some time to realise. Scientists from around the world said India does not have any constellation or launch vehicle which is capable of a manned mission to space. "India has a very low capability and it is not even able to launch a satellite," a leading scientist from Europe said. A senior scientist working on a manned mission said it is not true that India will be the first country to put an astronaut into space. "It is not true. We have so many challenges ahead to complete our programme," he said. However, the scientists did not take Singh's comments lightly saying there is a "sense of exaggeration and arrogance" in his statement. They said the Indian government should reconsider its policies of putting its own men on risky missions to space by inviting foreign scientists. "We have enough resources to make a small budget travel to the moon," said a scientist from Jaxa (Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency). Shrikant
