Summary, a persistent groupware project for handling mailing lists, newsgroups, mailing lists and forums on the internet.. features like "copy client (3G) phone number, SMS and video chat into" .Q: What is a good way to backup local mailboxes? In times of yore, our ISP's backup service for mail consisted of a tape drive. Not a terribly fast way to backup, but simple and easy to use. Today's system has an easier interface, so it seems to be more common for people to have their backup done this way. However, I am of the opinion that it is much better to have the backup done as a full backup, as in, performing the backup so that I can get full recovery if something happens to the PC. My question is: what is the best way to backup your local mailboxes? Is there a way to setup your email to allow your mailboxes to be backed up in this way? Should I be looking at some sort of external hard drive to be able to backup my mailboxes? A: If you're just backing up your mail, the 'least expensive' method I know of is to configure your email client to send your mail to a SMTP server that does this. For example, with Apple's Mail, you can send your mail to pop.mymail.com (or whatever the hostname is for your mail server) and have Mail encrypt and store it on your server. You'll need to set up mail settings on your mail server, of course, but it's far simpler and faster than asking your ISP to do it for you.
