I think my script is searching the PDF file incorrectly, and I think I need to add some sort of loop to find the files, perhaps with an.XML file to read through and search the directory for the string. I'm just not sure how to work this out. Anyone with any suggestions? import os from PyPDF2 import PdfFileReader import lxml.html path = "C:\Users\UserName\Desktop\MyDirectory\myDirectory" i = 0 for root, dirs, files in os.walk(path): for filename in files: if "name="text.ext"" in filename: print (filename) A: I've had similar issues to yours. I think the problem is that it's not finding the file correctly. I was working with a recent release of PyPDF2 (2.2.1) and the PyPDF2 docs weren't up to date. So one way of doing this was to use the inbuilt functions for reading PDF files. This allowed you to directly open the file and read it. I'd suggest checking that your code is the same as the sample from the docs and not some voodoo. You can read the PDF using the following: from PdfFileReader import PdfFileReader from StringIO import StringIO import lxml.html f = open("test.pdf") fh = PdfFileReader(f) text = fh.getPage(0).extractText() f.close() This seems to work for me, if you have the PDF open in Adobe Reader.
