If you were never told that you had diabetes, your blood sugar number is probably fine. If you had been told you had diabetes, your blood sugar number should be _as close as possible_ to 140 mg/dl. Your doctor should be able to tell you the number he believes is in the range that's right for you. If your number isn't within that range, you need to have it checked again and adjusted until you're better off. 2 Your blood sugar number may be changing with time. A figure over 200 mg/dl can be dangerous, but numbers over 240 mg/dl require careful attention.
